Given the tremendous rise in income inequality in the U.S. over the past four decades, there is an ongoing national debate about what policies are needed to promote more widespread economic prosperity. An effective policy agenda requires an accurate diagnosis of what has been happening and an evidence-based understanding of what various policy responses are likely to achieve. This talk will highlight a set of facts about the rise of income inequality in the U.S. and discuss a set of particular policy responses.